

kitchen trends 2024

THE PALETTES, TEXTURES AND
DETAILS THAT ARE HOT RIGHT NOW

Livingetc

BUTTER YELLOW

A few years back, the fashion world was dressing like a 'stick of butter' in shades of soft yellow and cream. Now it looks like the dairy-inspired phenomenon is heading our way - and, actually, we're pretty into it. A light buttery yellow is the hue of choice for the more contemporary-minded - particularly in the kitchen, where it has just enough interest to stand out in a nice, sunny way. Bespoke English kitchen in Pale Vanilla (cabinetry) and Buttermilk (island), Martin Moore

MINI ISLANDS

A new wave of islands in miniature forms is making its way to kitchen design, performing the same function as a full-sized version - but in a package that's perfectly suited to small spaces. Cesar's Maxima 2.2 island takes up just over eight square metres and provides space for storage, cooking and washing. And with its jewel-like PVD vintage gold finish, it's proof that these additions can pack a design punch, too. Maxima 2.2 mini island, Cesar

WET BARS

As handy as a coffee niche is, isn't a wet bar just a bit more fun? It needn't take up more than a small counter's worth of space and it's the perfect thing to fill an alcove if you happen to have one going spare. The way to design a home bar at the moment is all about understated glamour: patinated metal splashbacks, open shelving to show off your cherished glassware and, of course, an injection of dark, subtly veined marble. Cheers! Kitchen, Naked Kitchens

